Embree Alexander was still hospitalized on Friday, but hoping to be discharged on Saturday. Earlier in the week her labs still showed signs of infection, but her blood remained negative for bacteria. A third MRI showed infection still in the tibia, so she had surgery on Thursday to place a drain to help relieve the inflammation, and she improved quickly. Once released, she will continue IV antibiotics for six weeks.

Cali Snyder was moved to a “step-down” room last week after being in ICU for a month. She continues to make steady progress and is able to communicate between naps. She was able to be transferred to Cleveland through Angel MedFlight.
